EducationWorks Names New Board Member

Philadelphia-based nonprofit adds business-orientated strategist to Board of Directors

PHILADELPHIA – EducationWorks, Philadelphia’s premier organization for providing academic support, career readiness, and enrichment programming to children and young adults, today announced the addition of President and CEO of CTN Solutions, Drew Morrisroe, to the organization’s board of directors.

Morrisroe founded CTN Solutions in 1997, with the goal to help small and mid-sized companies understand IT from a strategic perspective as a tool to meet their business goals and objectives. His company provides IT consulting services, as well as cloud management, application development, and IT staff augmentation. He attributes much of his business and personal success to his involvement in a number of non-profit and charitable activities, such as Hugh O’Brian Youth Leadership Foundation.

He has more than 25 years of experience as a board member for a number of nonprofit and private organizations, providing executive leadership, strategic planning, governance, human capital, finance, and business insight. He successfully chaired the strategic planning committee of Philadelphia University whose work led to the strategic combination of Philadelphia University and Thomas Jefferson University this year.

He received bachelors’ degrees in information systems and finance from Philadelphia University in 1996; and a master’s of business administration in international business from Philadelphia University in 1999.
